The modifications of sound in the Art of Music are resolved, mainly, into two divisions viz: First - the modification of sound with regard to the degree of frequency of the vibrations or pulsations of the air, which produces what is called pitch - and, Second - the modification of sound with regard to duration and succession, which is called time. The former makes Melody; and the latter Rhythm; both of which, even in the simplest music - or that of a single part - are generally combined.* Music, in its greatest perfection, consists of several parts together; which combination is called harmony. The analysis of music, therefore, reduces it to three distinct properties - melody, rhythm, and...
